Matt Andersen

An Honest and Hard Working Man!

"It's so hard gettin' by these days as an honest man I'm just trying to do my part, just want to lend a hand"

- Matt Andersen "An Honest Man" 2016

If you haven't heard of Matt Andersen then the only way to understand it is that you have had your head in the sand. Matt has blazed a path as a Blues troubadour across Canada, Australia, Europe and the World. Soul, Blues, Roots and Canadian Folk: there is no stopping this tower of song. Matt began his career in 2002 in his home town area of New Brunswick playing with a local band called Flat Top. It wasn't long before his soul drenched vocals, guitar stylings and song writing talent had him taking center stage. Like BB King who was known for his hard working tour schedule; performing 100 concerts a year at eighty; Matt loves to tour and perform. By 2008 he was doing 200 concerts a year and had toured the UK four times. In 2009 he won the East Coast Music Association's "Best Male Artist of the Year" and "Blues Recording of the Year" for his 2008 album Something In Between.

Music defined Matt's early home life, his brothers and his mother all played. Singing was always a welcome guest at their table. He was exposed to all styles of music but living in New Brunswick, that included Acadian. Matt tells a story about the 80th birthday party for his grandfather, who played the fiddle. "My grandfather's love of playing had a huge influence on me, he was always the last one to put down his fiddle. He played around New Brunswick but never took a dime for it and when he arrived to play, other musicians would say "now it's going to get good." Friends, loving family and musicians of all stripes were invited to his grandfather's kitchen party celebration. 15 fiddle players showed up, fiddle in hand, ready to do honour!

"It's the Real Thing" WNCW 88.7 interview about his album Half Way Home by Morning 2019

"With his naturally beautiful voice, Andersen could sing anything he wanted, but he chooses songs that are authentic and real." Rock & Blues Muse with Martine Ehrenclou

You cannot go wrong with a single Matt Andersen LP, they are all remarkable, but this 10th recording, Half Way Home by Morning released in 2019 is special. Recorded in Nashville live off the floor in a kitchen studio called Southern Ground it is a dream come true for Matt. He had always wanted to do an off-the-floor album, an increasingly rare thing these days. With JUNO award producer/multi instrumentalist winner Steve Dawson involved you can expect excellence. With guest artists like Amy Helm and the McCrary Sisters wrapped in Muscle Shoals affection, you can expect magic. For Matt, his dream was realized.

The Big Bottle of Joy!

"He can captivate and hold a room like nothing else I have ever seen." - Q with Tom Power

To hear Matt Andersen perform solo acoustic is an act of sheer dynamic force and beauty. To add eight other superb musicians to his sound is a Big Bottle of Joy. Matt says it started as a fun idea but crystallized during Covid. "I took advantage of people not travelling, got together with them, loved it, and formed a band. It is the first time I had a chance to play with musicians I had a long history with." Composed of A-1 East Coast musicians and 3 female vocalists, the Bottle of Joy Band toured across the country and also went into the studio. He released his twelfth album Big Bottle of Joy in 2023, delivering 12 tracks of Blues, Gospel and Roots inspired songs fueled by a love for humanity. Matt co-wrote most of the songs himself and produced the album. It is well crafted, inspirational and a complete pleasure to listen to. The synergy with this band is striking. They, like Matt, are a presence.

"We've got to learn to live together, if we're going to make it through. We've got to learn how to live together, we got a whole lot of living to do." - "Can I Tell You What's on my Mind" song from Big Bottle of Joy 2023

In 2013 and 2016 Matt Andersen won the European Blues Awards for "Best Solo/Acoustic Act" In 2014 he received a JUNO nomination for "Best Roots and Traditional Album of the Year," for his release Weightless. In 2015 he won the CIMA Road Gold award for the highest level of achievement touring Canada. He was the first Canadian to ever win the top prize as a duo/solo artist at the Memphis International Blues Challenge beating musicians from 39 U.S. states, 11 other countries and five continents. He has played on stage or headlined with a who's who of the best artists in the world today. In 2021, Matt won a Maple Blues Award for "Male Vocalist of the Year." He has released twelve albums, including a Christmas album called Spirit of Christmas. He has amassed 18 million views on Spotify and 18 million on YouTube.

Despite his success, Matt is shy, humble and grateful. He doesn't blow his own horn and prefers to talk about the great musicians he has got to play with. His musical highlights are often personal. Earlier in his career, he frequently toured with Stuart McLean and the Vinyl Cafe. He was set to do a show at the National Art Galley in Ottawa, one his biggest to date. He lamented to Stuart how he wished his parents could be there, but his father had never flown before and said he never would. Stuart not only managed to convince Matt's dad to fly to Ottawa, when they got there he convinced Matt's mom to sing a song on stage with Matt. "Standing beside my mom in front of 2500 people is still one of my favorite moments. It was a beautiful melding of where I came from and where I was."

Matt Andersen has received 5 nominations for this year's Maple Blues Awards, including Entertainer and Songwriter of the Year. He will be performing at the gala on February 12th at Toronto's Phoenix Concert Theatre.

Memphis Tales

The Toronto Blues Society did not send a representative to the International Blues Challenge this year due to a lack of submissions. Next year there will be a greater effort to beat the bushes for candidates. We were well represented by TBS Event Coordinator and Musical Director of the Maple Blues Awards, Manny DeGrandis who plays bass for Glenn Marais and the Mojo Train, representing the Grand River Blues Society. Todd Phillips of Newmarket Today was imbedded with the Mojo Train gang and reported on their adventures:

It was so cold in Memphis, Tennessee last week that even the famous Peabody Hotel ducks were talking about flying further south.

Water pipes burst all over the city. Residents had to boil drinking water and the streets were a frozen hazard. Even Graceland was closed.

Meanwhile, in the midst of this, two great Canadian acts were heating up the bars up and down Beale Street representing Canada in the 39th annual International Blues Competition.

After two rounds of sizzling blues performances in the qualifiers, the four-piece Newmarket band, Glenn Marais and the Mojo Train, and solo bluesman Patrick Fockler impressed the judges enough to make it to the competition's semi-finals.

Both acts had competed and won the right to represent the Grand River Blues Society at the event that brought more than 130 blues acts from across the world to Memphis to compete for prizes, notoriety and the chance to play at major blues festivals.

The Canadian acts from Newmarket didn't travel alone. About two dozen Canadian supporters from the Newmarket area and beyond made the trek to Memphis to support their local musicians. They boisterously cheered them on as they performed and competed in some of the most famous blues bars in the world in the city often credited as the home of the Blues.

The Mojo Train enthusiasts weren't hard to find throughout downtown Memphis. They were decked out in black hoodies with Mojo to Memphis on the back. For many, it was one part fan experience and one part January vacation exploring those few parts of Memphis that were still open.

As with all quests, the journey wasn't without its challenges. A series of vicious storms meant the musicians and their fans did a lot of white knuckle driving through regions of the Deep South not at all equipped to clear snow and ice from their roads.

Mojo Train's driver Gary Rushton ably navigated the Mojo Train's rented 12-seater van loaded with the band and their gear and a handful of friends. Other travellers faced long airport delays and flight cancellations.

Even in Memphis the challenges continued. Some Canadians had to find other accommodations when water pipes burst in their hotel.

Mojo Train's drummer Jeff Saulnier slipped on the ice on the second day and injured himself. (I'm no doctor but he probably broke some ribs). But aided by Advil and ice (and a little alcohol), Saulnier took the stage every night to perform and brought the full force and fury of the Mojo Train's unmistakable rhythm section to Beale Street.

"They've got a lot of sound for four people," said one impressed fan from Minnesota who was there to cheer on her own hometown blues band.

The Mojo Train's dynamic keyboard player Jesse Karwat (fresh off a tour with I Mother Earth) was in high demand at the late night open jams at the Rum Boogie Café where musicians jammed after competitions wrapped at night. The jams with other world class musicians were a highlight for many of the Canadian musicians.

Mojo's bass player Manny De Grandis was also fielding requests to play and jam with other bands. A solid bass player can never seem to leave the stage and that was the case for De Grandis.

Meanwhile Mojo Train's charismatic frontman vocalist and guitarist Glenn Marais let it rip the first night at the Rum Boogie Café and turned a lot of heads. But once the competition began Marais dialled it in, sipping tea and honey to soothe his voice, and he rested up for the band's performances like a pro athlete.

During his performances, solo act Patrick Fockler, looked at ease on stage, and played like he'd been there before, (which he had because he earned a spot in the semi-finals once before in the band category) as he delivered blisteringly fast and melodic blues solos playing a mix of blues covers and originals. Fockler was engaging on the mic, talking with the crowd explaining his song selections and why they mattered to him.

Fockler played both his sets at the Pig on Beale, and qualified for the semi-finals, one of very few acts from outside the United States this year that weren't sent home after the opening rounds.

Only one of the 12 acts that made the finals was from outside the U.S. which is perhaps a little concerning for an "international" blues competition that started with 28 international acts from Canada, Germany, Italy, Norway, Croatia, France, the Netherlands and Australia.

For the well-rehearsed Mojo Train, quite simply they killed it each night. They brought their high energy style of blues-funk infused with the echoes of the Delta Blues to the stage and delivered flawless performances night after night. They had a signature sound and style that set them apart from many of the more traditional blues acts. The recipe worked and they advanced to the semi-finals.

Apart from the skilled musicianship they displayed, they delivered catchy and thoughtful songs, with Marais introducing the meaning behind them on songs like Red, Hot & Blue, written about the Memphis blues radio show that helped launch Elvis Presley's career.

"See you at the Orpheum for the finals," said one musician to frontman Marais after his set. Several other musicians that came by to meet the band expressed similar admiration for what they had just heard.

"You remind me of Jimi Hendrix," said the frontman from another U.S. blues band, expressing his respect and then asking for the band's contact info so they could connect after the competition.

It's these informal exchanges and networking opportunities that are perhaps the greatest reason to participate, and will be the legacy for many artists and fans.

So what's it like behind the scenes at the International Blues Competition? The competition feels like one part music festival and one part figure skating competition.

The Mojo Train, Patrick Fockler & entourage still standing (on snowy Beale Street) and ready to head home after an intense week of networking, socializing, partying and playing some kick-ass blues.

A table of volunteer judges, who are blues lovers and connected to the Blues Society, sit at a table with an app on their phones with information about each of the bands and a rating system.

At times, depending on the venue, they have to fight to see the acts because the performances all take place in bars and restaurants and they are packed with fans and supporters for each of the acts.

The judges use the app to rank the bands and solo/duo acts out of 10 in a number of categories like blues content, originality, vocals, instrument talent and stage presence. Each performance is strictly timed and bands have only 10 minutes to set up and be ready to play after the previous performer.

That means getting your gear on stage, doing instrument and mic sound checks, setting up guitar pedals, cymbals and drum foot pedals and then you play. If you take too long, you are docked points. If you take too long to break down and clear the stage after your set, you also lose points. During the performance if you go over your allotted time — 25 minute sets for quarter finals — 30 minutes for the semis — you are docked points.

The organizers have no choice but to run a tight ship with more than 130 bands playing across 13 venues simultaneously, but the time crunch creates a heightened sense of tension and excitement. Will they start on time? Are they going to go over or under their allotted time?

Organizers hold up cue cards with two minute, one minute and 30 second advisories as the clock is ticking down on their sets. Go over at your peril. Some songs end midway through while others get stretched out for a few more bars. It's the blues after all and it can flex as needed.

In between performances the Canadian musicians and their fans explored the frozen city that the winter storms had mostly shut down (although it would have been just another day in January for the Canadians.)

Some of the group visited Sun Studio where legends like B.B. King, Jerry Lee Lewis, Roy Orbison, Carl Perkins, Charlie Rich and, of course, the King himself Elvis Presley recorded records. It's considered holy ground for blues and rock and roll fans.

Others visited the National Civil Rights Museum built into the Lorraine Motel where Martin Luther King Jr. was gunned down in 1968.

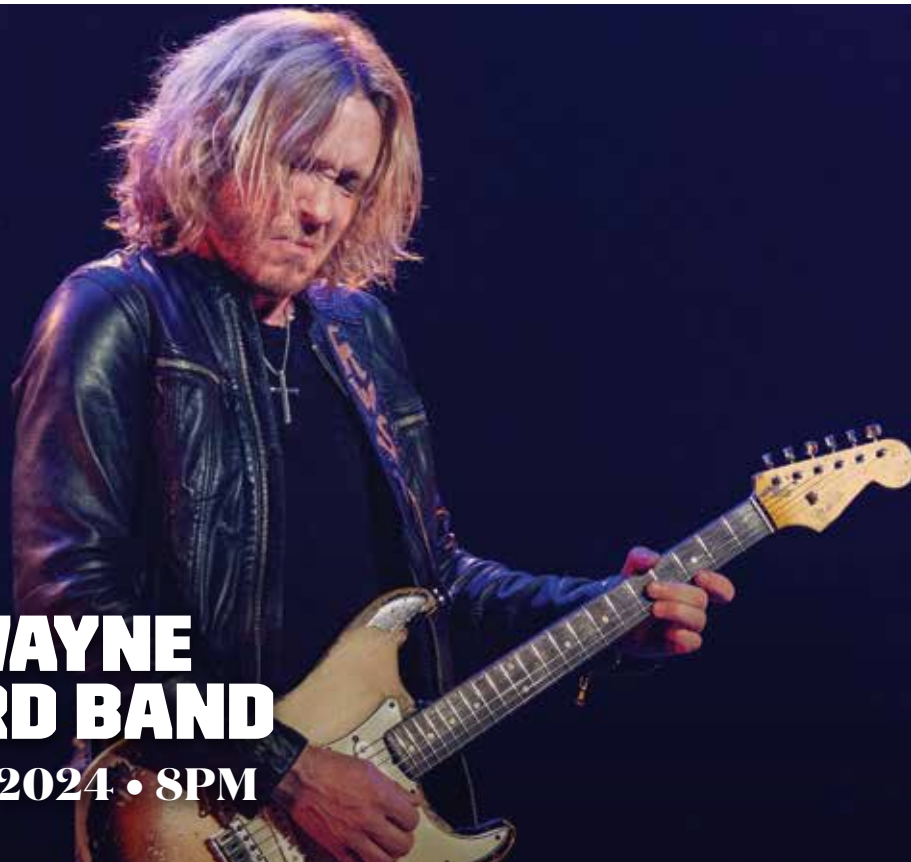

Often the Canadians gathered at the Kooky Canuck, a restaurant run by a Canadian expat from Montreal, where they could enjoy memorable Canadian dishes like poutine, Halifax donairs and Montreal-style steamie hot dogs, a late night bar staple in la belle province — and Molson Canadian beer.

These fans and friends, and dozens of others, were active for months before the trip attending various fundraising events to help offset the costs for the musicians who played for free and had to forgo paid gigs for the chance to represent the Grand River Blues Society, which they did admirably.

When the Canadians didn't make the finals that took place at the famed Orpheum Theatre, there was clear disappointment, but not a lot of sour grapes. Drummer Saulnier reminded some of the Canadian delegation that the talent in the bars was next-level musicianship. As a veteran musician, his trained eyes, and especially ears, knew he was hearing some amazing performances.

When it was all said and done everyone packed up and returned home.

"See ya next year in Memphis," said one group of newly found friends at the airport, a little worse for the wear, a little lighter in the wallet, but enriched for the experience.

Next year the IBC event takes place Jan. 7 to 11, 2025. For more information visit www.blues.org.
